Mt. Daisen is the highest peak in the Chugoku Region and has long been an object of faith for a system of intricately intertwined and evolving forms of worship. The passage of time immemorial has not only borne witness to changes in these systems of faith but also to the conditions of the local population; however, the profound sense of gratitude held by them for all of the various forms of blessings Mt. Daisen has bestowed upon their lives remains unaltered.

In 2018 Daisen Temple, the nucleus of human history and focal of spirituality in the area, celebrates its 1300th anniversary. To commemorate this momentous occasion everyone is welcomed to attend ancient rituals that trace all the way back to the very foundation of the temple as well as to participate in the various festivals and events throughout the year.

Tottori Prefecture’s Mt. Daisen Celebrates 1300 Years of History in 2018
Since time immemorial a world of Eastern mysticism has thrived here. For 1300 years Daisen Temple has stood at the center of it.

History of Daisen Temple

The Foundation of Daisen Temple

Daisen Temple was established by a hunter named Yorimichi who came from a place called Tamadukuri in Izumo Province (Eastern Shimane Prefecture). According to Daisen Temple history, Yorimichi was out on a hunt and had tracked a golden wolf into the forests of Mt. Daisen. Closing in for the kill, he drew an arrow and aimed it square at the golden wolf. Then, just before letting his arrow fly, Jizo Bodhisattva appeared before him.

This appearance suddenly awoke a sense of strong faith in Yorimichi and he tossed aside his bow and arrow as a sign he would no longer take the life of another living creature. Seeing this, the golden wolf transformed into an aged nun and addressed him directly. This experience inspired Yorimichi to lead a life of spiritual devotion. He changed his name to Kinren and enshrined Jizo Bodhisattva on Mt. Daisen thus establishing Daisen Temple in the year 718. (Taken from the Daisen Temple Pamphlet)

The Creation Myth of Shimane Peninsula

The deity Yatsukamizukumonozunokikoto that appears in this myth as recorded in the Izumo Province Report of 733 felt displeasure at the narrowness of the Izumo Province. He therefore tore chunks of land away from the Korean peninsula, the Okin islands, and parts of the Hokuriku region and then, using the long shorelines of present day Yumiharuma in Tottori Prefecture and Sononosagahama in Shimane Prefecture as ropes, pulled all of these land masses together to form the Shimane Peninsula. Finally, in order to prevent the newly formed land from coming apart, he pegged it in place using Mt. Sanbe and Mt. Daisen as piles.

Daisen Shinko in the Sanyo Region

Daichimon Genzen is a manifestation of Jizo Bodhisattva. Daisen Shinko and Shugendo practitioners blended in aspects of both Buddhism and Shintoism in their worship of this deity. The resulting faith, originally unique to Mt. Daisen and termed Daisen Shinko, began to spread around the Sanyo region from the Kamakura era (1185-1333) and, as evidenced by extant temples with ties to Daisen Shinko in both Hiroshima and Okayama Prefectures, still remains strong to this day.

From ancient times the people of the Daisen area worshiped the mountain itself as a god. As such, logging was forbidden and the mountain remained off limits to the general public until recent times. For this reason, the forest surrounding the foot of Mt. Daisen has spread out over the centuries and become the largest old-growth beech forest in Western Japan. The rain and snow that pours down upon the widespread forest canopy seeps slowly into the ground and brings forth an abundance of life as it flows through villages, farmlands, ranches, and finally out into the sea.

Today there are a wide variety of popular outdoor activities to engross all five senses in this outdoor paradise. Visitors can work up a sweat while climbing through pristine beech forests to the mountain summit, enjoy intimately walks along ancient trails or explore one of the many different cycling routes. Also, the stars as seen from Mt. Daisen shine so clearly that it seems as if an unstructured arm would suffice to pluck one right out of the night sky. The nightshade in front of the mountain’s foot is faintly illuminated by the distant brilliance of electric lights on fishing vessels out at sea as well as the warm glow of summertime fireworks. Here, the light from both heaven and earth unite in harmony.

The clean water, abundant food, unspoiled nature, and spectacular night sky are considered a benefit of the primeval beech forest which, in turn, owes its health to the mountain worshipers that have long served as its stalwart protectors. Here, near the heart of Mt. Daisen, it might even be said that a natural life of overflowing health spilled into a perennial appreciation and veneration that has long enabled the possibility of such a life to continue.

Japan’s Largest Livestock Market

Fostered by Daisen Shinko

Jizo Bodhisattva is a deity believed to offer salvation to all living organisms. As such, a high priest of Daisen Temple named Kiko decided to distribute paper charms invoking divine protection for the local livestock while also encouraging their grazing in the pastures around the mountain. This soon resulted in the flourishing of a form of livestock worship in the Daisen area. These well-fed horses and cattle raised in Mt. Daisen’s pastures caught the attention of visiting pilgrims and they began to bring their own livestock. Soon livestock competitions were being held during the spring festivals at Daisen Temple. This marked the beginning of a flourishing livestock trade that rapidly developed from the Kamakura era (1185-1333) into Japan’s largest livestock market with over 10,000 horses, cattle, and other animals changing hands every year by the middle of the Meiji era (1868-1912).

The local people have always held a profound sense of gratitude for Mt. Daisen for the harmony it brings to their lives. Water nurtured by the beech forests flows down the mountain into villages and then out to sea in a cycle that beggars the locality with lush greenery, abundant crops, and large catches of fish. These natural gifts in turn provide the perfect setting to foster a harmony of mind, body, and breath.

Daisen Mohitori Shintō
A National Intangible Cultural Heritage
July

The Mohitori Shintō ritual has been designated as an Important Intangible Folk Cultural Property. “Mohi” refers to a vessel used to serve water used in ancient times. “Torii” refers to the act of taking something. The Mohitori Shintō occurs every year on July 14th to 15th and consists of an evening festival at the Ogamiyama Shrine’s Okunomiya followed by a climb up the mountain by a mohi bearer. A ritual is then performed at a pond near the peak of the mountain. After, the bearer draws blessed water from the pond with the mohi and picks herbs. To celebrate 1300 years of history there will be a special performance of Kabuki (Shintō theatrical) dance on July 14th and a distribution of blessed water to visitors on July 15th.

Mt. Daisen Autumn Festival
October

A procession of children dressed in Heian era (794-1185) costumes lines the cobblestone path leading up to Daisen Temple under a forest canopy stained in autumn colors. Within the temple grounds an after featuring a consecrated fire is set up as part of a volitive ritual where offerings thrown into the fire are carried up to heaven in exchange for blessings. Later, a tossing of celebratory rice cakes as well as a drum performance by Daisen warrior priests caps the festivities.

1300 Years of History Special Buddhist Service*
*Reservation Required

The Daisen Temple Kitosuha talismans were a determining factor for the designation of Matsue Castle as a Japanese National Treasure. Special Buddhist services to invoke fortune and luck will be held from the first day of the opening ceremony until the end of the event.

The Daisen Temple Main Hall is situated at an altitude of 900 meters and enshiryes a temporary manifestation of Jizo Bosatsu called Daichimyo Gongen. A special Buddhist ritual that has been carefully preserved as it passed down through 1300 years will be performed here during the celebration period.

The pictures are of annual memorial prayer cards. To celebrate the 1300 anniversary of Daisen, we have created a special commemorative prayer card.

Experience the History of Mt. Daisen

Ogamiyama Shrine’s Okunomiya sits at the top of the cobbled path leading up from the Main Hall of Daisen Temple. The structure ranks among Japan’s most impressive examples of gongenzekuri (a style of Shinto architecture in which the main hall and worship hall stand beneath a single roof) and are connected by a passageway. It is designated as an Important Cultural Property of Japan. Originally called the Daichimyo Gongen Shrine, it served as the central hub for a form of mountain asceticism that merged aspects of both Buddhism and Shintōism and flourished as the largest regional shrine in the Chugoku Region. In the late 1800s Shinto was forcefully separated from Buddhism which led to the abolishment of Daisen Temple and the removal of all aspects of Buddhism from the complex including the name of the shrine which stemmed from a bodhisattva. The shrine was then decreed as the Ogamiyama’s literal “inner shrine” of Ogamiyama Main Shrine located at a considerable distance in Yoneago city.

Daisen Temple prospered as a monastery for Shugendo monks devoted to a form of mountain worship. From the Heian era onwards the number of temples in the compound increased alongside the growing Buddhist influence. At the height of its prosperity the complex consisted of more than 100 temples and over 3,000 warrior monks making it a seat of influence comparable to that of the famously powerful Buddhist complexes at Koyasan, Heian, and Yoshino. However, it fell into decline in the late 19th century due to the forced separation of Shinto from Buddhism as part of a movement to expel Buddhism from Japan. Today, only four halls of worship and ten sub-temples remain. The original main hall of Daisen Temple burned down in 1928 and was rebuilt in 1951.

The Amida Hall is the oldest extant building in the Daisen Temple complex. Established at the beginning of the Heian era (794-1185) and completed in its later half, a landslide destroyed the hall in 1552. It was rebuilt at its current location in 1552. Inside sits a 2.79 meter wooden statue of the Amida Buddha (the Buddha of limitless light) flanked by the Kannon and Seishi bodhisattvas (the bodhisattva of mercy and the power of wisdom, respectively) created by the Buddhist sculptor Nyosen which, grouped with the hall, has been designated as an Important Cultural Property of Japan.
